New therapies and challenges in diabetic retinopathy. Diabetic retinopathy is the leading cause of vision loss among working-age people in the Western world. Recent studies show that both loss of vision and additional blindness in this condition are avoidable in selected patients with diabetic retinopathy. Treatment of diabetic retinopathy includes laser photocoagulation to the macula and vascular occlusion surgery in selected patients. An added challenge is that the latter two treatments require access to a laser device and/or medical facility. Successful treatment of diabetic retinopathy depends upon knowledge of the etiology of the retinopathy, its progression and the efficacy of current treatments. Continued development of lasers, drug delivery, and new surgical methods is an ongoing scientific challenge and should provide further progress in the care of patients with diabetic retinopathy. Q: How can I correctly tell a friend that he is being lazy? I'm having a bit of a difficult time figuring out how to tell my friend that he is being lazy. The relationship is a bit of a rocky one right now, but I still care enough to want to give him an honest and concise explanation. He's been working hard on getting back on his feet after going through some fairly emotional turmoil over the last few months and he's doing a fantastic job, and he genuinely works hard to ensure he's doing everything in his power to become completely stable again. However, I keep finding myself frustrated with the quality of his work. He ignores a lot of social interactions and he doesn't always show up in time for work. Even something as simple as him not leaving work and driving home with work tends to take a half hour or more, sometimes during the day, and it's not because of the work itself. The issue is he wants to discuss other things after work, c6a93da74d
