

The worst part of the night was simply getting to the stage. Alyssa Milano was at The Shrine Auditorium Sunday night to help raise money for California's firefighters and their families. The "Scream Queens" star showed up on-stage via Skype, joining four of her television co-stars and a handful of other celebrity friends. California Governor Gavin Newsom, Sacramento Mayor Darrell Steinberg and other state and local politicians joined them on the stage, where they all then sang a beautiful rendition of "In the Chapel in the Moonlight." Watch the video above and listen to the performance on our YouTube channel below.

Relation between perceived pregnancy success and pregnancy outcome. The present study assessed the relationship between perceived pregnancy success (PS), as defined by the concept of "pregnancy as a positive life event," and pregnancy outcome in a convenience sample of 404 women. PS was measured using a 12-item questionnaire. Among all the women, the majority was either "very dissatisfied" (33%) or "somewhat dissatisfied" (17%) with their pregnancy outcome, whereas 14% were "very satisfied." At the mean ages of 21.3 and 31.7 years, respectively, women who scored above the median on PS had a higher probability of having a child over the next 3 years [odds ratio (OR) = 1.5, 95% confidence interval (CI) 1.1-2.0], whose pregnancy was completed (OR = 1.7, 95% CI 1.2-2.5), and whose pregnancy resulted in the birth of a child (OR = 1.6, 95% CI 1.1-2.4). These findings suggest that PS is an accurate perception of the likelihood that a pregnancy will be completed, and that the positive emotions associated with the pregnancy experience are related to the likelihood that the pregnancy will result in childbirth.
